Pacific Historic Parks Wins $250,000 Preservation Grant for World War II Valor in the Pacific National Monument

(HONOLULU, HAWAII) Pacific Historic Parks (PHP) today announced it will receive a $250,000 grant provided by American Express and the National Trust for Historic Preservation. World War II Valor in the Pacific National Monument qualified for the grant as one of the top nine most voted for parks in the Partners in Preservation: National Parks campaign. Grant winners were determined solely by public voting online during a six-week period from May to July 2016.

PHP will apply the grant to help restore one of the historic Battleship Row Mooring Quays at Pearl Harbor. The mooring quays are the last structures remaining from the attack on Battleship Row during the Japanese bombing of Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941. PHP expects to break ground on the project by September 2016.

PHP and National Park Service (NPS) are also partnering with the non-profit Concrete Preservation Institute (CPI) as part of the larger five-year project to restore all six mooring quays that are part of the monument. CPI is an approved Career Skills Program for the military. The preservation techniques applied would provide opportunities for military personnel to learn management and construction trades as they transition to the civilian workforce.

The national grant competition was sponsored by Partners in Preservation, a partnership between American Express and the National Trust for Historic Preservation.
